Jacob Miller stormed out of his uncle's house.

He clenched his fists and walked at a fast pace. How could his Uncle be so calm after everything that had happened?

Jacob was so engrossed in his thoughts that he didn't notice the approaching young lady and bumped right into her, knocking her to the ground.

He bent down to assist her, concerned that she may have hurt herself. Jacob was immediately struck by the simple beauty of her face. Her auburn hair was tied in a knot, and the hazel eyes looked wonderingly at him.

"My apologies, ma'am. I was lost in my thoughts," Jacob sputtered.

She took the proffered hand, and got to her feet. She smiled and it was like the first bloom of spring washing away his worries.

She said, "That makes two of us. Even I wasn't watching where I was going."

Jacob smiled, happy to see that she wasn't hurt. He was interested in the young lady. "My name is Jacob Miller. What's yours?"
