Hell Hath No Fury 4: Mercy Brown Troy Taylor

In the fourth book of HELL HATH NO FURY, author Troy Taylor continues his series of titles that presents the "Spirits of Victims, Vengeance and Virtue"... a look at the dark side of women from the lingering ghosts of women who kill -- or have been killed. Veering between the worlds of the supernatural and true crime, each book will take readers on a horrifying journey in the minds and hearts of darkness.

HELL HATH NO FURY 4: MERCY BROWN TALES OF AMERICAN VAMPIRES

In this installment of the popular series, author Troy Taylor takes a different turn and takes readers on the trail of a different kind of "spirit" -- the American vampire. Throughout the history of New England, the Puritans and their descendants strongly believed in vampires. They were not the typical vampires that one thinks of in the European tales, but death-bringers, devourers of the living and deliverers of death and disease. Vampires were not merely folklore and legend, they were unquestionably real! In this title, the author traces the roots of the vampire, the creature's presence in America as a carrier of consumption and death and how a belief in these monsters came about. He'll also present a collection of America's female vampires -- chilling spirits of the night who wiped out entire families with what was believed to be the touch of evil and death -- and America's last vampire, Mercy Brown. To this day, her story still haunts the Rhode Island town of Exeter and her story is so chilling that it inspired some of the world's greatest writers in their creations of monsters and the damned. Delve in what may be the darkest volume of the "Hell Hath No Fury" series so far!
