This historic book may have numerous typos and missing text. Purchasers can download a free scanned copy of the original book (without typos) from the publisher. Not indexed. Not illustrated. 1899 Excerpt: ...where he died, and where his life companion for nearly fortyfive years still resides. Their two children, a boy and a girl, died in infancy. At different times he was associated in the practice of law with two well known attorneys, Messrs. Holmes and Hanna. The Bloomington bar has long been held in deserved esteem on account of the strong men who from time to time reflected honor upon its membership. I remember with great distinctness the energetic and nervous Wickizer, the clear-headed and intrepid Hanna, the graceful and eloquent Swett, and the gallant and attractive Orme. Time would fail me were I to attempt the muster roll of those who merit espec;al mention. It is enough to say that any lawyer of extended practice in our court would then, as now, find himself competing with men who would develop whatever of legal acumen, resolute purpose, and skillful manipulation of testimony and professional power that he might possess. I well remember the remark of a former practitioner at our local bar to the effect that anyone who had crossed swords successfully with the leading lawyers of McLean county need have no fear about holding his own wherever his lot might be cast. The education which Judge Scott received from these forensic encounters prepared him in no mean way for the honorable places which were to come to him in the mutations of time. Meanwhile great events were beginning to crowd the historic stage. A proud and sensitive people determined to submit the perpetuity of its "peculiar institution" to the dread arbitrament of battle. The long centuries of struggle between Puritan and Cavalier, between the awakened conscience of a race that had pledged itself to the cause of human rights, and the incarnated selfishness of the slave oligarchy were at...
